RECENT HISTORY

Prior to the arrival of Europeans the area was inhabited by the Chapwurrung Aboriginal people. The first pastoralists took up properties in the late 1830s. A small European township developed which was initially known as Mount Sturgeon. A Post Office of that name opened on 1st July 1852. As the early settlers were predominantly Scottish, it was renamed Dunkeld from 1st January 1854 after the Scottish town of Dunkeld. The Hamilton to Ararat railway reached Dunkeld in 1877.

Dunkeld became mainly a pastoral area, with some areas growing fodder and fodder seed. Stone quarrying in the Grampians has led to the use of a significant amount of local stonework within the township. There has been continuous milling of timber taken from Victoria Valley in the Grampians. Also enduring has been the use of Grampians honey flora by Dunkeld apiarists.

In 1944, the town was ravaged by fire which destroyed one-third of the buildings in town. After World War II several remaining pastoral estates were subdivided for soldier settlement allocations. The resulting increase in population and the improvement in local transport led to the opening of a consolidated school (primary school) in Dunkeld in 1952.

A themed shelter may be constructed within the Dunkeld and District Memorial Park, close to the large Golden Elm tree. The area around the proposed shelter requires ground profiling to establish improved drainage.
